Princess wedding magic makeup salon diary part 1

Planning a wedding takes a lot of work (not to mention money). It's basically a universal truth. From booking the place, serving food and sending all these RSVPs, the time leading up to the big day can be a bit confusing. But to save some extra money (and cut off excess stress), you decided to do your own makeup on the wedding day. It can be a bit stressful to create your own beauty look on the wedding day, because this is not any day, it's your big day. In addition to ensuring that your makeup remains, you want it to look great in the photos. Don't be afraid: we've put together all the tips you'll need to apply your makeup like a professional, from the pros. Continue reading for 17 tips and tricks recommended by experts to nail that wedding day beauty look alone. No matter how experienced in makeup you may be, you don't want to wait to apply your look on the wedding day for the first time on your wedding day. Practice, practice, practice until you get the look you want, says Liz Fuller, a professional makeup artist based in Boston. Then document what you used so that on the wedding day you can refer to your notes to remind you what products you used and how you used them. Perfect skin is the best possible canvas for your makeup. And the great skin for your wedding day is all in preparation, says makeup artist Hillary Kline. If the budget allows, start getting monthly facials -- targeting at least three or four -- before the big day, she says. This will help firm up and brighten your skin. Not only do you need time to apply your makeup, but you'll need a calm environment to do so, says makeup artist Béke Beau. Grooming rooms can be quite hectic at times and members of well-meaning bridal parties can distract you, so it's important to have a little privacy to relax and put on your makeup, she says. Once you moisturize your skin, you'll want to apply a thin layer of primer, says Jo Levy, makeup expert and artist at Jo Levy Makeup. A primer will serve as a temporary concealer, filling enlarged pores, as well as smoothing fine lines and a few deeper lines, she says. The different textures of the primer will also help to prepare the skin. For example, a mattifying primer will help to immediately decrease excessive glare, while an illuminating primer will give the skin an instant and radiant foundation for makeup. You need a separate primer for your eyelids than the one you used on the rest of your face. For the eyes, I recommend using an eye primer or eye shadow cream that is neutral in tone, levy says. A bony or bare shadow works well to help balance discoloration on the lids and allows for a smoother application of eye shadow if you plan to layer more powder or cream shadows on it. Combine with the help of to find a foundation that's right for your skin type and create a natural look, says Kline. The powder foundation helps define makeup and also helps prevent your face from getting greasy in photos, she says. But if you add too much you run the risk of making your skin look dry and old. The less phrase is more applies to that. Although sunscreen is very good for your skin, it can be very bad for your wedding photos. The zinc and titanium oxides found in spf formulas can cause a white plaster on the face in flash photography, Fuller warns. If you should slather in sunscreen for your outdoor wedding, make sure it is on your moisturizer and not on your foundation. Sunscreen is not the only thing that will give you a ghostly glow. White finishing powders can also cast your face in unflattering ways, says Rachael Rubin, owner and founder of PaRLR. When a flash hits the powder on your face, it will give the appearance of white clown skin, she warns. Says Kline: Let's face it: the bride will be busy running around finishing last-minute chores, staying up late, attending a rehearsal dinner, and more. What about those unwanted dark circles or a sudden spot? Be sure to place the base on first and then lightly dab with your fingertip in areas that look dark. You don't need to be born with thick eyebrows to make a statement on your wedding day. Says Beau: Eyebrows are the defining feature on your face, so if you're not endowed with full and perfectly shaped eyebrows, come out of a long-lasting forehead product and define what you have, always working with your natural shape. Like SPF and white powders, things that shine don't shine -- pun intended -- in pictures. That means any eye shadow, facial powders, markers with sparkles --they look absolutely terrible in flash photography, says Kline. Stay with neutral, subtle tones and more matte shadows in your eyes. Stay with neutral, subtle tones and more matte shadows in your eyes. Not only do you want your mascara to stay in place through any lost tears, but waterproof formulas should withstand the heat, too. For summer brides, the heat can cause the heaviest mascara to scold and melt --and that's not good, Rubin says. Layers on the lips will ensure a lasting finish, levy says. Start by conditioning your lips with a lip balm to help prepare and soften and keep applying a light layer of lipstick in a satin or cream formula, she says, then slide her lipstick in a second time to build her color. Optionally, if you prefer to add the appearance of volume and setting, draw the lip liner together or just outside the natural lip line and then feather in the color in the lipstick. Press your lips together to set. Also fully optional: Finish with a light layer of brightness for a multidimensional look. Says Rubin, doing makeup to be photographed is a different game than a casual look. While you may be hesitant, in the case of photography, more is more. Rubin says that add color to your will prevent you from looking washed away, while Fuller defends more blush than you may be accustomed to. The key to actually making your makeup last, Fuller says, is to use an adjustment spray. Some formulas last 16 to 18 hours, she says. They prevent the makeup from wearing, and and sweatproof and waterproof --although you still can't jump into a pool. Although you may be tempted to pack a pressed powder in your bag, you should never reapply powder, Fuller says. Instead, she suggests using stained sheets. Always use a sheet of stains to absorb oil, she says. Stain sheets won't disturb the makeup --they just lift the oil to a dull finish. Says Fuller: If you don't wear much makeup in your day to day, then you shouldn't have a cat's eye for your wedding day. Instead, she recommends adhering to colors that will brighten your eye area without exaggerating. And, if you have a stronger eye, then you should go for a more neutral lip color, she says. If your eyes are less invented, you can make a more daring lip color. Take a trip down the memory route that will make you feel nostalgia AF Picture: BBC Most women dream of meeting their prince (or princess) and one day having that fairytale wedding they've been planning since they were little girls. Although this never happens, there are some women who actually achieve the charming wedding of their dreams, especially the real brides. From the moment the royal engagement was announced, there is much preparation that must happen for the wedding to be a success. One of those things, and undoubtedly the most important aspect is the wedding dress. These dresses are made by some of the most sought-after designers in the world, and many of them require many months and, in some cases, years to be built. With all the buzz surrounding the recent wedding of Meghan Markle, now Duchess of Sussex and Prince Harry, Duke of Sussex, we thought it was fair to take a look at some of the most beautiful (and expensive) royal wedding dresses. Will you be able to identify these princesses in their stunning dresses? There's only one way to find out how much you know, and that's doing this test!
